Not illustrated. 1891 Excerpt: ...leads of the Kootenai Mining and Smelting Company. There is no more healthful region in Idaho. Streams, lakes, and mountains combine to make natural scenery of unrivaled beauty. Sites for homes of the greatest loveliness and comfort are open alike to rich and poor. New settlers are constantly coming in, yet still there is room. There are as yet few valuable public buildings; but the county is new, and the enterprising settlers are gradually providing schools and other accessories of the best civilization. Where land is as cheap as the wind that blows, And gold in every rivulet flows. The lands are high, rolling prairie, covered in their virgin state with a dense growth of bunch grass. The soil is a deep black loam, upon which immense crops of all the cereals and less tender fruits can be raised. The statistics given in the accompanying tables are the most emphatic comment upon the productiveness of the soil, showing, as they do, that already an annual yield of grain and seeds aggregating three and one-third million bushels, has been attained. When all the agricultural lands of this county are brought under cultivation it may fairly be estimated that the production will exceed the present yield of the entire territory. Springs of water are abundant, irrigation is unnecessary, and droughts unknown. The county contains an abundance of timber f...
